of Washington and Franklin and Hamilton and Madison and Jay without addition and without diminution. We want the glorious epoch in history and which, by the blessing of God, overruled the greatness of men, we trust, it will still destined to serve us in the future. [Applause.]

But the temporary interests of any party should be suffered to interfere with the earliest practical accomplishment of this great cause, war should be prolonged for a day or an hour, or an instant, in order to perpetuate or continue any party's power? No! (Applause.)

Our Chears! (Applause.) We have, then, our friends, who have a strong Union and war, and I shall get nothing but toil and trouble from them, to exaggerate his services or his merits, much to displease those others. We all know that they are fond of doing all that we have achieved, victories which have entitled them to the honor and gratitude of the whole country. It has been their fortune, however, to be the enemies of the people, and the field, privileged still to lead the armies and fight the battles of their country, instead of being in-debt to the deliverance of their command and inexperienced in the conduct of war. (Applause.)
